Who has not noticed her funereal propriety, how absolute it is! Prima donna of the difficult gamut of the affections! by what unexceptionable gradations she sounds the heavy bass of sympathy; the slow chromatic notes of consolation; the still, ascending tones of admonition, suggestive insinuation, and increasing cheer, --until she trills away, with inimitable verve, among the high halfnotes of lively speculation. At weddings she is festal, though with a pensive moderation, as if remembering the vanity of all earthly hopes, and the fleeting nature of all earthly joys. In social scandal, she is the incarnation and the mouth-piece of modesty attacked, virtue and truth outraged! She is loud, as such noble qualities naturally are. But a ripe grief, that may not be controlled, a new-made grave, leaving a gap in some wounded hearts far wider than it makes...
