But ah, with the infinite loss Of honor, in lust of gain. And bitterness filled his soul, And he bowed his face to the earth--For her what was the worth? For him what was the dole? And there, for the wage of sin, A shot and a heart-beat stilled--Was it Love, was it Love that willed What better had never been? The Word THE WORD A gray wood and a lifting mist, A dewdrop by a sunbeam kissed, A sunset sky of roseate bars, A little pool that holds the stars, A robin singing while the light Fades softly into quiet night. A red leaf gently drifting down, A heart-cry from the crowded town--The moonlight on a far still stream, A prayer, a memory, a dream. The wafted fragrance of a rose, The haven that the sparrow knows, The nectar that invites the bee--The mystery of you and me. The deathlessness of space on space--The Word no mortal can erase. The Clouds THE CLOUDS Mysterious, changeful wanderers that keep With bright enchantment the inviolate blue, Leaguers with flame and many a radiant hue, And fair mirages of the outer deep--My soul salutes you! Ages slip away, And nations build on dust of nations dead--But you, immortal, with bright sails out-spread Live, loved of Beauty, knowing not decay. Or are you spirits of that countless host, Born of the earth, now onward voyaging Like migrant birds, toward some eternal spring, Toward some still haven of a...
