Not illustrated. 1829 Excerpt: .their constitutions--I mean that of eating biscuits after they have dined, 4 i t Oh certainly, said the cornet, who knew nothing of indigestion, or my other disease, except by name; for, except in case of a sea voyage, and the accompanying sea-sicknesv with which he was always visited on such occasions, lerce never experienced any deficiency in either appKile or digestion, and was always prepared to do ample justice to whatever was set before him at.the ordi. try period of refreshment. But, probably, 31 r. Butler, your stomach is not naturally deficient in tone! -, - Oh dear no, said the cornet, and looked significantly at the weak tea, as if appealing to a proof of lus stomachic vigour. I fear you don t F-ke your tea, said the lady, observing the point to which his eyes were directed; gentlemen, I know, generally like it strong, but the major and myself tir/J that strong tea has a serious effect upon our nerv, s and consequently I rarely put into the teapot more th;u two spoonfuls, or perhaps two spoonfuls and a half when the half pound is nearly out--the bottom Dart, you know, not containing so much of the absolute lefn of the plant, and being therefore less powerful. The cornet expressed his perfect comprehension of die motives which induced Mrs. Costiff to deal so sparingly with the tea store; and fearing that a more lengthened investigation of the nervous system might lead to the...
