Excerpt: .the gates cannot play a finer game than to dive into this maze and see what luck may send him. He cannot very well lose himself; Pisa is not big enough for that; and there is always the river, or the city wall to run against, or the great square of the Duomo, with its most wonderful group of buildings, the Cathedral, the Baptistery, the leaning Tower, and the Campo Santo. For a third and a fourth time we returned to this central point from which everything in Pisa is measured. We gazed at the tower again, but did not ascend it this time. We are just in time to see it, I said to Mona, it is going to fall now: there it goes! It didn t, but that expresses the sensation every one has, who sees it for the first time, or...
