Morning Journey to Blythwood--A Cordial Welcome-- Hardships of War--More Kindness--Arrival of the Wagons. We started about seven o'clock, and at first the air was very cold; but soon the delicious sunshine appeared to gladden our hearts and cheer us on our way. Of course my mental thermometer rose at least fifty degrees at once, and I was soon enjoying the very beautiful hill-scenery by which we were on all sides surrounded. There were several little streams to cross, and it was pleasant to descend from the buggy and go over the stepping-stones, and I should really have enjoyed the whole thing very much had I not begun to feel excessively nervous about our reception at Blythwood, and I sincerely wished it could still have been my lot to have remained in my home and be in a position to offer, instead of ask for, shelter and hospitality. I now remembered that the handsome, Scotch lassie, who had been my sister-passenger in the European, from Cape Town to East London, had told me she was going to keep house for her elder brother, at a missionstation called Blythwood, and it flashed upon me that possibly this nice little lady might be the Miss Macdonald whose name was now on every lip, for was she not to be our hostess? On inquiry I found this to be the case, and the reflection comforted me somewhat, as it was far pleasanter than to...
